MYANMAR:
You’re giving hope to Indigenous women in Myanmar.

This unique restaurant, run by Mon Women’s Organization (a Cuso partner), employs only Indigenous women. In this part of the world, it’s rare for these women to run their own enterprise and be financially independent. Typically illiterate and from remote rural villages, they’re often forced to work on farms and take on domestic responsibilities. They may also be victims of gender-based violence, or even human trafficking.

With the support of Canadian volunteers, Khamoom and her co-workers are earning income and gaining independence, all while helping to preserve their traditional Mon culture.

Your gifts to Cuso are creating hope and opportunity for women and girls in Myanmar.

DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE CONGO:
Thanks to you, more women and newborns are surviving childbirth in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Hélène Bombula Liema is unmissable as she sweeps down the maternity ward in this small hospital in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Dressed in electric pink, she warmly greets her fellow midwives, all similarly dressed in shades of rose. Here in the DRC, pink is the colour that identifies a midwife.

Midwives face harsh conditions in the DRC, yet their role is life-giving. In a country where women can’t afford formal medical care, and, when they can, are treated poorly, midwives are essential. Yet midwives have little access to drugs, and minimal training.
COLOMBIA: Strengthening and Sharing Business Skills, with Your Support!

Deira Tomasa Quiñones was determined to create a better life for herself and her family, but traditional employment wasn’t the way to do it. In Colombia, where Deira lives, minimum wage doesn’t provide enough to survive let alone thrive.

Like many Colombians living in poverty, Deira decided to start her own small business. She knew it was a risk. After all, the majority of micro-enterprises in Colombia fail within the first year. But Deira has a good chance of success thanks to her participation in Cuso’s SCOPE project (Sustainable Colombian Opportunities for Peacebuilding and Employment). The program aims to help Colombian citizens in seven cities who are living in poverty find meaningful and sustainable employment.

Deira and others receive training from Cuso volunteers in the technical and soft skills they need to succeed in the workplace. The SCOPE team works with local stakeholders to develop initiatives, events and to provide technical assistance to promote employment opportunities for people in vulnerable situations.

Thanks to donors like you, who allow Cuso to send Canadian volunteers to work on projects like SCOPE, Deira and her fellow entrepreneurs are full of hope for the future, and they have the skills to make their dreams come true.

That’s where Cuso’s Midwives Save Lives project comes in. Thanks to Canadian volunteer midwives, Hélène and her colleagues are learning ways to save lives using just their hands and basic medical equipment.

“Before the workshop, I didn’t know that you could bring a postpartum hemorrhage under control without using drugs. I didn’t know you could resuscitate a newborn without drugs. Now I can do both these things and show others how to as well.”
THIS YEAR, your gifts helped vulnerable people around the world.

For every caring and supportive donor, 271 people around the world benefit from the skills and knowledge shared by Cuso’s Canadian volunteers.
